

Abstract of the Disclosure

A system and method of managing fuel vapor pressure in a fuel system. The direction of air flow between first and second ports on either side of a chamber is controlled by a liquid that divides the chamber into first and second portions. A leak detection test, excess vacuum venting, and pressure blow-off of the fuel system are controlled by displacement of the liquid.